Eleanor Herbosch is a London-based Belgian painter and ceramic artist, who is currently undertaking a Bachelors degree in Ceramic Design at Central Saint Martins. “Minimalist. Asian infused. Flirting with the abstract. Larger than life. Art has been with and around me for as long as I can remember. Being raised by parents who have a balanced appreciation for art, has only encouraged my interest into two of my favourite practices: painting and ceramics. My curiosity and admiration for oriental design grew substantially after my first trip to Japan a few summers ago. The Japanese have a special word ‘Shibumi’ and it’s tricky to define. It is powerful silence; it is elegant simplicity. It is a direct and simple way without being pretentious and that is what I have been trying to achieve with my work.”
